Marcelo Rabach

Thank you, Dan. Good morning, everyone, and thank you for joining us. The strength of the results we reported this morning demonstrate how far we've come as a company over the last decade.

They also reinforce the strength of the Arcos Dorados business model with solid U.S. dollar growth to start 2024, even in the face of a very challenging economic environment in one of our main markets. This is a testament to the importance of operating responsibly and managing the business with a long-term mindset.

In the last 10 years, we diversified the business, reducing the weight of any single country. While Brazil remains our biggest market, NOLAD now contributes a growing share of sales and EBITDA, much of it in hard or very stable currencies. And within slab markets like Chile, Colombia and Uruguay have also increased their contributions to consolidated results. Our objective is to generate sustainable profitability growth over the long-term.

To this end, the business model and the 3D strategy are working well together. Everything starts with sales, and our balanced approach to managing pricing, product mix and guest volumes is driving above inflation compatible sales growth. The most critical driver of sustainable sales growth is guest volume. And the McDonald's brand continues to capture the highest volume per restaurant in our region by far. The region's growth potential is huge and we are still accelerating restaurant openings. In fact, we plan to invest in the McDonald's brand for many years to come. And our investments will foster a virtuous cycle of growth in our communities and local economies. In turn, this will support our long-term expansion plans, while insulating the business from short term volatility.

Before getting into the specifics of first quarter results, I want to take a moment to express how saddened we are by the severe flooding in Brazil's southernmost state, Rio Grande do Sul. Fortunately, all our employees in the state survived the flooding. In the short term, we are focused on supporting our employees and their families, including with basic necessities and by guaranteeing their job security until the situation improves. We have also begun distributing food within the communities we serve, as well as to first responders.

Moving forward, we will be working on several initiatives in coordination with local governments and NGOs to continue supporting our people and do it in reconstruction. Finally, I should also note that our business exposure to the state is relatively limited. And so far, Brazil's second quarter trends have not been materially impacted by this situation.

Turning now to the first quarter, performance in Brazil and NOLAD more than offset the impact of the devaluation of Argentine peso on concentrated results. Total revenue rose 9.1% in the first quarter, supported by the 12th consecutive quarter of positive compatible guest traffic at the consolidated level. System wide comparable sales rose above inflation in nearly all markets as well, and were up 2.2 times blended inflation for the entire company, excluding Argentina.

Antonas [ph] Brand visit and spend shares remain more than two times our nearest competitors and the brand attributes we track are at or near all-time highs across the region. The digitalization of the Arcos Dorados business also remain on track in the quarter with digital channels generating 55% of system wide sales.

Total digital sales growth of 30% in U.S. dollars was driven by delivery, self-order kiosks and mobile order and paid sales. Notably this quarter, we signed an agreement to become a regional sponsor of Formula One in Latin America. Over the years, this global sport has become popular among families within the region, reaching all demographic, gender and socioeconomic groups.

In addition to providing a significant boost to our brand presence in the region, this sponsorship will focus on further leveraging the successful 3D strategy, including the synergy with the precision, teamwork and speed of service of our industry leading drive through business.

Finally, restaurant openings continue to accelerate. We added 22 EOTF restaurants, 19 of them free standing. Brazil opened 11 restaurants, including 10 new free standing units. Luis will now take us through an overview of sales performance in each division.

Luis Raganato

Thanks Marcelo and good morning everyone. As Marcelo just mentioned, we believe sales growth above inflation is the most sustainable way to increase profitability. Brazil's comparable sales rose 9.4% on top of 13.8% in the first quarter last year. This year's growth was 2.2 times inflation in the period, with higher volume and average check contributing to the result.

Digital sales grew 38% and accounted for 65% of total sales in Brazil. Importantly, 26% of sales were identified. As a reminder, these are transactions where we not only have customer data, but where customers have explicitly authorized us to track and use their data.

Additionally, the "Meu Méqui" loyalty program continued to gain traction in the market in the quarter. Brazil's marketing plans and campaigns became the talk of the town during the first quarter, with the continuation of the successful "Méqui MePega" campaign and the launch of the "Big Tasty Turbo Cheese". We engaged with Gen Z customers by once again, sponsoring the Lollapalooza music festival in São Paulo, as well as the country's most popular primetime TV show, Big Brother Brazil.

We also drove brand excitement and customer engagement across all sales channels by bringing back the McFish sandwich as a limited time offer, selling out in a very short time. Finally, the dessert category included the introduction of the McFlurry “Chocrocante” with an iconic Brazilian chocolate “Diamante Negro”.

NOLAD’s comparable sales grew more than three times blended inflation in the quarter, with guest volumes driving almost the entire result. Every single marketing NOLAD grew comparable sales above inflation in the quarter, with strong volume growth as the main driver. Performance was particularly impressive in Mexico, with comparable sales up in the teens driven primarily by guest volume growth. I should note that the quarters result also benefited from the extra trading day due to leap year, as well as from Holy Week, particularly in Mexico.

Key marketing activities in Mexico included the launch of the new value platform, “Elige tu Fav”, which allows guests to choose between delicious beef or chicken combos at an attractive. Notably, digital channel sales in Mexico doubled versus last year, and the McDonald's app is now the most downloaded and used app across the country's QSR industry.

Panama implemented a strong value platform, coupled with one of the biggest brand equity scores in the region, to accelerate the business in that country. In Puerto Rico, we gained significant visit share as the new brand campaign “Saca tu Encanto” resonated well with guests.

Finally, as Marcelo mentioned, we signed a regional sponsorship of Formula One that resonates across our footprint, with special meaning in NOLAD, given the popularity of Mexican driver, Checo Pérez.

Comparable sales grew below blended inflation and slag due to the significant economic slowdown in Argentina in the quarter. However, except for Argentina and Ecuador, the other large markets in the division generated comparable sales growth well above local inflation. This included Chile, Colombia, and Uruguay, where guest-valued growth was robust. Comparable sales were at 1.8 times blended inflation and slag, excluding Argentina.

The silver lining in Argentina was that, while consumption was down 20% to 30% in the country, Arcos Dorados volumes declined at about half that rate in the period. The local team delivered this impressive result by continuing to offer consumers the best value proposition in the market's QSR industry. These led to significant market share gains against our main competitors and improvements in our brand equity scores, which should position us for a strong rebound once the economy stabilizes.

Similar to Brazil, the SLAD division strengthened brand affinity and excitement among younger consumers by sponsoring the most relevant music festivals in the region, including Lollapalooza in Argentina and Chile, as well as Estereo Picnic in Colombia.

We brought many innovations to SLAD's markets with the launch of the "Quarter Pounder Western BBQ" in Chile and Uruguay, "Quarter Pounder Cheesy Jalapeño" in Ecuador and the "Grand Tasty Spicy" in Argentina. These new product launches were all met with strongest responses, helping drive restaurant traffic and average growth.

SLAD also continued making inroads in the chicken category with the launch of the "McCrispy Chicken" platform in Uruguay and the "McCrispy Chicken Legend" in Colombia, which is quickly becoming a guest favorite. All the marketing efforts related to many favorites, music and sports are generating tangible results. Market share performance in the quarter was strong throughout the Arcos Dorados footprint in both visit and sale share. We also measured 2.5 times top of mind and 1.5 times favorite brand scores against our main competitors on average across the geography. This was supported by all the markets we track with quarterly data, in NOLAD and SLAD, which gained important market share in the period.

In Brazil, where we continue to strengthen the brand's leadership position, we achieved an all-time high visit share score over the training 12 months. According to our research, Brazil reached record high scores in brand equity, including top of mind, while remaining the country's favorite QSR brand by a wide margin. Notably, we measured favorable gaps against our main competitor in all the brand attributes we track, covering experience, taste, community impact, family environment and affordability, among others.

Over to Mariano for a closer look at consolidated and divisional profitability in the quarter.

Marcelo Rabach

Thanks, Luis. Good morning, everyone. First quarter adjusted EBITDA growth was in line with revenue growth in the period, highlighting the diversity of our operation and the resilience of the cost structure, even following the significant evaluation of the Argentine peso. As we mentioned on our last call, we expect to generate EBITDA growth primarily through revenue growth, while capturing efficiencies and margin opportunities over the long run. The consolidated EBITDA margin was flat with lower Food and Paper and G&A offset primarily by a higher occupancy and other operating expenses as a percentage of revenue.

A consistent value proposition and a lower cost environment led to the improvement in Food and Paper and significant revenue growth leveraged G&A. Meanwhile, below inflation growth in Argentina was the main cost of lost operating leverage in fixed expenses. For full year 2024, we expect the favorable cost environment to continue and will focus on gaining efficiencies in other line items. Divisional results reflect this dynamic, with Brazil extracting almost 27% higher U.S. dollar EBITDA and 90 basis points of margin expansion from its strong top line growth.

Importantly, Brazil's solid margin expansion included lower Food and Paper, Payroll and G&A expenses. NOLAD also turned its impressive sales growth into almost 21% U.S. dollar profitability growth and 30 basis points of margin expansion. SLADs U.S. dollar EBITDA decline in the period was driven almost exclusively by the reduced consumption in Argentina and the translation impact from the Argentine pesos significant evaluation at the end of 2023. The resulting volume reduction in division's largest market caused sales and operating leverage to decline, which reduced margins as well.

To a lesser degree, SLADs results were also negatively impacted by the effect of the unrest in Ecuador. Looking ahead, the macroeconomic environment continues to be challenging to predict in the short term, but we remain focused on generating the strongest possible full year results in each of our markets, leveraging the diversity of our operating footprint to drive consolidated U.S. dollar profitability higher than last year.

The driving force behind our results for the last three years was the 3D strategy of Digital, Delivery and Drive-thru. The work to digitalize the business is far from over and the results of the first quarter demonstrate how this strategy still has plenty of room to drive performance across the entire Arcos Dorados' footprint.

Digital, which includes sales from the mobile app, delivery and self-ordered kiosks grew 30% in U.S. dollars versus the prior year quarter. These channels accounted for 55% of system wide sales and allowed us to identify 22% of sales in the quarter as well. In Brazil, digital channels generated 65% of sales, including 26% identified sales with actual customer data. Delivery and Drive-thru sales combined were up 14% year-over-year in U.S. dollars. These two channels that make up off-premise sales and heavily leverage the companies free standing restaurant footprint accounted for about 44% of system wide sales in the quarter.

Brazil's delivery sales grew by more than 44% in U.S. dollars and was more than four times the nearest competitors delivery sales in local currency terms, according to publicly available information. NOLADs results also benefited from strong digital sales, particularly in delivery and self-ordered kiosks as we continue the digitalization of this markets. The loyalty program we launched in Brazil and Uruguay so far has grown to more than eight million registered members as of the end of April 2024 up from 3.2 million at the end of last year. We should have loyalty in two more markets by the next earnings call and we expect to be fully implemented by the end of 2025.

Loyalty boosts the power of the mobile app by taking customer data from identified sales to offer an increasingly personalized guest experience. We have been very encouraged by the accelerating growth in registered members and a very positive trend in 90-day active customers. Together, this drive frequency significantly higher than non-loyalty customers, which also increases the customers lifetime value. We are already seeing this in both Brazil and Uruguay and the rollout of loyalty in each new market will benefit from the learnings we are gaining in existing loyalty markets. Mariano.

Mariano Tannenbaum

Let's take a look at our capital structure and investments in growth. Our net leverage ratio remained at a very healthy 1.2 times at the end of the first quarter. I'm also pleased to report that a couple of weeks ago Moody's upgraded Arcos Dorados corporate and senior debt rating outlook from stable to positive. We affirming the Ba2 rating based on our liquidity condition and latest operating performance.

Over the last 12 months, cash from operations remained in line with the prior period. We have been deploying excess cash primarily to support restaurant growth and modernizations, as well as expanding digital capabilities. We continue to expect to fund this year's CapEx plan with cash on hand and cash from operations.

In the first quarter, we opened 22 restaurants, which is on pace to meet full year guidance, and we deployed about $61 million for capital expenditures for restaurant openings, modernizations and maintenance, as well as for digital and IT enhancements. Marcelo, back to you.

Marcelo Rabach

In the next few days, we expect to publish our 2023 social impact and sustainable development report. You will be able to download the report by visiting the recipe for the future website. Let me give you a preview. This will be our 10th annual ESG report, which is also the industry's only report to include audited content. The latest edition will showcase all the progress we made last year across the six pillars of our recipe for the future. Among the highlights were the hundreds of thousands of training and job opportunities we offered to the region's young people. This is one of our most important contributions to the economic development of the communities we serve, even that almost two-thirds of our employees are younger than 24 years old. We are also proud of the diverse and inclusive workplace we offer, having received more than 40 awards and other forms of recognition just last year from a variety of governments and NGOs.

On the environmental side, more than 30% of the energy Arco Dorados uses now comes from renewable sources. And this number continues to rise as we sign more agreements for this type of energy, providing an incentive for these energy producers to continue investing in the countries where we operate. These are just a few examples of the important work we are doing for the benefit of our communities and the environment.

I opened today's call by saying that first quarter results demonstrate how far we've come over the last decade. Before we move to Q&A, I would like to leave you with some final thoughts. The strength of the Arco Dorados business model is evident in the first quarter's results. We operate across a diversified geographic footprint, generating a growing amount of cash flow from stronger and more stable currencies and markets than ever before.

Sales growth remains solidly above inflation, supported by positive guest volumes at the consolidated level. This is driving profitability growth in a way we believe is sustainable over time. And we are capturing incremental operating efficiencies as well. Most importantly, all the levers we have pulled to generate these results are far from over. The brand continues to capture significant market share. Our menu is constantly evolving to meet customer preferences. The digitalization of all markets is and will always be an ongoing process. Our pricing tools are increasingly sophisticated, further balancing sales growth and margins. The operation is already the industry standard and it's getting better. And we still have a huge opportunity to accelerate restaurant growth across the entire region. These are among the many reasons we are confident in our ability to continue generating significant shareholder value in the years to come.

Thank you once again for your interest in Arcos Dorados and ongoing support of our business. Dan, over to you to start the Q&A session.

Question-and-Answer Session

A - Daniel Schleiniger

Thanks, Marcelo. In order to get started, please minimize the presentation slides so that you can access the chat function on the left hand side of the webcast platform. Please limit yourself to one or two questions so that I can read, understand and convey them to our speakers. We will now pause briefly to compile your questions.

Great. Okay. So we have actually already several questions in the chat room. Lots of multi-part questions. So we'll take them one by one and we'll get started with Chavo Boccalucci [ph] at Goldman Sachs, who says sorry for the long list. Good morning, Arcos's team. Chavo's first question is in Brazil, if we can provide a breakdown between ticket and traffic that drove the comparable sales growth in the country. So that's for you, Marcelo.

Marcelo Rabach

Okay, thank you, Dan. Good morning, Chavo. Thank you for joining us today. Look, we had an excellent first quarter in Brazil. And as you know, comparable sales are a function of guest volume, pricing and product mix. And we have a positive contribution of each of these drivers. In terms of guest volumes, they rose low single digits in the first quarter of 2024. So they were positive again in Brazil in the first quarter. Pricing was basically in line with headline inflation and product mix improved thanks to the higher participation of digital and loyalty sales versus the prior year. So the three components of the comparable sales had contributions to the figures we saw in Brazil in the first quarter.

Importantly, according to Chris, we gain both PC share and sales share in the first quarter and over the trade in 12 months with some of the smaller players in the industry losing share. In fact, over the last two years, if you take a look to Brazil's numbers, first quarter comparable sales have grown more than 24% in the cumulative two years. And of those increases, 40% around 40% came from volume and 60% or less came from [Indiscernible]. So we are in the strongest position in Brazil to capture additional growth in coming years. And these will generate for sure significant shareholder value thanks to our very strong position.

Daniel Schleiniger

Great. Thanks, Marcelo. Along the same lines of Brazil, Chavo says, with channels, the delivery sales channels growing at 44% year-over-year, it seems that this was the main driver of same-store sales growth. While on-premise performance was lower in the quarter, can you share costs by channel in Brazil? And that one, I guess, to you Luis.

Luis Raganato

All right. Hello, Chavo. How are you? Of course, delivery keeps on surpassing our expectations with an impressive growth of 44%. But having said that, we had a very good sales quarter in Brazil with all channels growing positively in the mid-teens. Specifically in delivery, we're leveraging from our free standing restaurant portfolio the strength in operations and marketing execution the close relationship that we have with 3 PO's and the recent launch of our loyalty program.

Daniel Schleiniger

Yes. Thanks, Luis. And then in continuation, again, with the Brazil sort of channel dynamics, Chavo then asked, and what was the contribution of the channel mix to our gross and EBITDA margins in the quarter? And I'll turn it over to you, Mariano.

Mariano Tannenbaum

Perfect. Thanks, Tiago [ph], for the question. And hi, everybody. Of course, the contribution was very positive on the first quarter of this year. EBITDA grew almost 27% from $59.5 million on the first quarter of 23 to $75.4 million in the first quarter of this year. And margin was up. EBITDA margin was up 90 basis points from 15.9% to 16.8%. And it's extremely or we are extremely happy to see that this increase in margin was reflected in several lines, mainly in Food and Paper. So we are improving gross margin in payable, which is improving as well. And G&A, which are the three main cost lines in our income state.

Daniel Schleiniger

Great. Thanks, Mariano. And let's stick with you because Chavo's next question relates to Food and Paper. Can you comment on how beef and potato are trending and how this would impact gross margin?

Mariano Tannenbaum

Okay, yes, we see a benign food and cost environment and we are optimistic with the outlook for 2024. In particular, we see a better outlook on beef with reduction in costs. We see some pressures on potato, but overall, there is a positive trend and we are expecting, everything else equal a better gross margin than what we had last year. So that's the outlook that we have for 2024.

Daniel Schleiniger

Okay, I think we're getting almost to the end of Chavo's list of questions. We have one related to Argentina, any comments on the traffic in the region and how it's been evolving throughout the quarters. And we also receive a similar question from Lorena Reich from Lucro, asking what our expectations are for the rest of the year in Argentina. And I'll turn that one over to you, Marcelo.

Marcelo Rabach

Okay, thank you. Yes, consumption in Argentina declined between 20% and 30% in the first quarter. But as we mentioned, during the opening remarks, Arcos Dorados volumes declined only about half that rate. And these volumes have been evolving modestly in a positive way, sequentially, since then. I would say that our local team has been doing an excellent job in terms of remaining close to consumers, offering them the best value proposition in the country's QSR industry by far. And as a result of that effort, we have gained significant market share and further strengthened our brand attributes. And this should put us in a very well position for when the Argentine economy begins its expected recovery. It is still too soon to know how all the macroeconomic factors will evolve during the year. But we are working very hard in order to navigate the current situation as well as possible and always with the long-term months.

So challenging context in Argentina. But remember that Arcos Dorados, the beauty of Arcos Dorados is that we operate in 20 different markets. So we have another 19 markets and our business today is very diversified with significant contributions coming from Brazil, from NOLAD, from other markets of the SLAD Division. So we are very confident that this diversification will continue driving consolidated profitability growth in full year 2024 and in coming years.

Daniel Schleiniger

Perfect. And final question, Thiago, a question from Thiago related to expansion. How does the scenario maybe hire for longer interest rates impact our near term plans around expansion? And I'll turn it back to you, Mariano.

Mariano Tannenbaum

Perfect. Well, in this case, we have a long-term plan of investments, openings, mainly free standing units in many of our markets in LatAm [ph]. We have the plan, long-term plan also to modernize our existing stores with EOTF. We are also deploying investments in non-development, mainly in technology to continue improving our digital platforms. And this will not change. We are seeing above average returns in general, mainly in our free standing units well above our cost of capital. And this will not change. So we will remain with our investments and we are very pleased with the results we are seeing so far.

Daniel Schleiniger

Great. Next set of questions from Felipe Cassimiro from Bradesco, his first question. Could you shed more light on the evolution of the competitive landscape in Brazil and Mexico with heated competition from other listed players? And how are we adapting to fiercer competition in the QSR segment? Back to you, Marcelo.

Marcelo Rabach

Okay, thank you. Well, look, we gain more than one percentage point, in fact, 1.1 percentage point of market share across our main markets in the first quarter of 2024, according to our research. And I would say that competition has been mostly rational, although, as you mentioned, we have seen increased promotion and activity in some markets, particularly in Brazil. But we are focused on offering a very compelling value, value proposition with competitive pricing and most importantly, a thing and much based on experience.

So this is driving volume growth in recent quarters and this helped us to leverage our fixed costs structure. So this year, for example, we have a more favorable cost environment that should help us to continue improving our margins while we respond and we react to competitive pressures as needed, given the fact that we are the leaders in all these markets, particularly in Brazil. And we have the ability to react and to put pressure in some competitors if we feel that that's the correct answer that we need to give them. So very well positioned and getting insured in most markets.

Daniel Schleiniger

Great. If you could send also a multi-partner, so I'm going to take these a little bit out of order for you if you allow me. Tax rate was substantially higher than our estimate. Could you elaborate the main reasons of the effective tax rate of around 40%? And how should we think about this over the course of 2024? Over to you, Mariano.

Mariano Tannenbaum

Perfect. Hi, Felipe. And thanks for the question. On a quarterly basis, the effective tax rate can be volatile, given the various rules governing the calculation of this liability in each of our markets. Remember, we operate in 20 different markets as our holding companies, as well as within our, our overall structure. So for the first quarter of 2024, we had an effective tax rate of 39.7%. This compares with 35.8% in the first quarter of 2023.

So looking ahead for the full year, even if it's difficult to predict, we believe that a consolidated DTR between 35% and 40% is a reasonable level to expect for the full year.

Daniel Schleiniger

Perfect. Next question is, how should we think about the evolution of the royalty rates in Brazil and should we still see a growth support offsetting this line in 2024? And I'll get back to you, Marcelo.

Marcelo Rabach

Okay, thank you. Felipe, we have in place an agreement with McDonald's for the growth support incentive that goes through the end of this year. So we expect royalty rates on a consolidated levels to stay in the same range than they were in this first quarter, around 6.3% of sales. And given the fact that we already agreed with McDonald's with the support for the whole year, we do not expect this number changing materially during the year. It's probably fair to say that the it's a fixed amount of growth support and sales have been above expectations. So it's a little bit less of an impact on royalty.

Daniel Schleiniger

And then, Felipe, his last question, and a little bit detailed here, but the supplier days dropped five days to 80 days in the first quarter of 2024, which is back in line with 2018 and 2019 levels. Could you elaborate on the reasons behind the reduction? And how should we think about supplier relationships and potential benefits with lower costs on a move forward basis? One more time, back to you, Mariano.

Mariano Tannenbaum

Perfect. Well, traditionally, the first quarter is the worst quarter in terms of working capital for the company due to seasonality. Remember that in this particular quarter, we also accelerated the openings. Remember, this year we had 22 openings compared with only eight openings last year. And this is, what we are trying to do in terms of avoiding having all our CapEx back ended. That could have had an impact on our accounts payables, because usually development suppliers had shorter terms than other suppliers.

So I wouldn't expect a change in our account payable terms, in the short or in the medium term. And if so, it would be for the better and not for the worse. That means we, if anything, we will expand payment terms and not reduce it.

In some cases, of course, there are opportunities to have reduction costs by changing the, the outstanding days, but those are very specific things and negotiations and we cannot, expand that to the whole bucket of our suppliers.

Daniel Schleiniger

Great. Thanks, Mariano. Now we're going to move over to Julia Rizzo from Morgan Stanley. Also, two or three questions here from Julia. The first one is, can you give us an update on sales trends and the key markets for the second quarter to date? And over to you, Marcelo.

Marcelo Rabach

About the second quarter in the key countries. Okay, I would say that, as I mentioned before talking about Argentina, the figures that we are seeing in the second quarter are in line with what we saw in the first quarter. Remember that the first quarter was very strong. It was in fact, our 12th consecutive quarter of comparable guest count volume growth. So cumulative sales trends are about in line with these numbers in the second quarter. Although we will not benefit this quarter from an extra trading day, and we will compare with Holy Week that last year was in the second quarter, we remain focused on delivering great value to our guests all across our menu. And we expect this to help us deliver a comparable sales growth at or above inflation in the full year 2024 in most of our markets. With a balanced contribution from pricing, product mix and guest volume, has been the case so far this year. So that's what we are seeing today in terms of points.

Daniel Schleiniger

Julia's next question relates to asks us if we can give more color on delivery performance. How much does delivery representative sales in Brazil? And that question is for you, Luis.

Luis Raganato

All right, thank you, Julia. Hello. In Brazil, delivery represents around 20% of system wide sales. And about the delivery performance. We operate delivery in more than 8% of our restaurants in 14 different markets. Delivery sales rose 27% in U.S. represented 18% of system wide sales. And about the evolution, delivery has surpassed our expectations so far. We believe that there are still good opportunities to keep on capturing market share, because even with the best course in speed and accuracy, we still have a big room to improve our operations.

And we believe that the channel has not reached full maturity yet. And because of this, we believe that our strategies and our operating models will continue to evolve our strategy will keep on focusing on strong operational execution. We're going to keep on working in innovations in digital capabilities and targeted marketing campaigns specific to the channel to strengthen, to keep on strengthening the strategic partnership with 3POs and on delivery that represents today about 10% of our total delivery sales. Dan.

Daniel Schleiniger

Thanks Mariano. Thanks, Luis. Okay, and then Julia's final question also relates to delivery, which is that after growing so much and achieving significant sales representativeness, how is this channel profitability versus consolidated figures in Brazil? So we'll give it to you, Mariam.

Mariano Tannenbaum

Yes, well, thanks Julia, for the question. In fact, all our channels are accretive to the business and they are generating good returns and contribution to EBITDA. You can see that delivery has grown a loss the last several years, representing now relevant part of our business. And so the margins continued to increase overall as well. So that means that delivery, even though there's a delivery fee that the company pays to the 3POs, there are many other impacts in our cost lines that benefit the margins overall and are helping to improve the overall margins of the company. Remember last year we had a record EBITDA margin and in this quarter and you can see that margins are improving as well.

Daniel Schleiniger

Great. I'm going to move back to now Lorena Reich from Lucro, who asked the question earlier about Argentina. She also asked, she said, good morning, congrats on the strong performance. Can you comment on the cash burn during the quarter, which is still very healthy but below 200 million versus usually having above that figure? So back to you, Mariam. Perfect.

Mariano Tannenbaum

Thanks Lorena for the question. I already answered a part of the question about working capital, seasonality being the first quarter, the worst of the four quarters we have. And this is due because, in January, usually we pay all invoices related to the end of the previous year and being December, our ice month in terms of sales and CapEx development in January, there's an impact on our working capital.

On top of that, this year in particular, the quarter ended on Easter Sunday, which is a four day holiday weekend in many of our LatAm countries that resulted in a temporary increase in the account receivables that were automatically collected on the next business day, Monday. That's a Monday of the second quarter. So these two effects, of course, have an impact on the cash flow dynamics of the first quarter.

On top of that, I already mentioned as well in a previous question that this year we accelerated CapEx on the first quarter, having opened 22 new restaurants compared with eight new restaurants of the previous year. So these dynamics are impacting the cash flow generation on the first quarter. But if you look at the trailing, twelve months. So then excluding seasonality, the operating cash generation remain in line with the prior period and we expect a cash conversion similar to last year.

Daniel Schleiniger

Thanks, Mariano. So now Lucas Fijeda from JPMorgan asks, how have restaurant operational KPI's been involving in Brazil, such as turnover, drive through speed, et cetera? So I'll turn it over to you, Luis, for an overview.

Luis Raganato

All right. Hello, Lucas. Thank you for the question. The evolution on operational KPI's in Brazil specifically have been very positive. We focused for the last two years, for example, on turnover, 90 days turnover. We focused on people. People is the base of our operations plan. And specifically in that KPI, we have seen a reduction of our turnover in about 20%. So that is very positive.

Our crew, our managers, are the base of our operations. And we rely on that to have an excellent execution and talking about speed and accuracy and in the rest of the channels and talking about drive delivery, even front counter, the improvements have been very significant. But having said that, we still have a huge room to keep on improving.

I would say that the main focus is to equalize operations trying to work, and equalization means that we try to work with low performance stores, end markets, even. We benchmark and leverage the best practices that we have in those that are high performance stores and markets. And that's the beauty of having 2020 markets, the geographic diversity that we have. So, in summary, we're pleased with the results, with the evolution of these KPI's, but we are obsessively focused in the continuous improvement.

Daniel Schleiniger

Dan. Thanks, Luis. And now over to Bob Ford from Bank of America, who says, good day, everyone. Good morning, Bob. Can you discuss some of the system's more successful CRM strategies in terms of activation and transaction sizes and some examples of our early successes? So we'll come back to you, Luiz. And I think this is also somewhat related to loyalty.

Luis Raganato

Yes, of course, I was going to go. Thank you, Bob, for the question first. Yes, and I'm going to go a little bit deeper into digital. And that we're pleased with the evolution of digital sales. About the performance. We have rose 30% in U.S. dollars accounted, as we said, for the penetration is 55% of total system wide sales, and this includes 22% of identifying sales. So we're very pleased with the performance and we are very confident that we're going to be able to maintain our growth trend.

Digital sales, the growth of the channel was driven by three main factors. The implementation of new functionalities to our app, the expansion of our customer base, and a great trend in active users. And loyalty was a booster of the sales because, I mean, we use the customer data and identify sales to offer or to try to offer a more personalized experience.

So we have three main KPI's to evaluate the program at its visa frequency, average check and 90 day active user. And what we are seeing is an acceleration growth in registered members. Like I said before, we had, I mean, we launched the program in Uruguay and Brazil in October 2023. By the end of December of last year, we had 3.2 million registered members, and by the end of April, we had 8 million registered members. That is a significant growth.

We're seeing that today, in the last weeks, that is still going on. And so we do not only see that growth in restaurant members, but a positive trend in active customers. And this steady increase reflects the growing engagement and interest that our guests have with it. And talking about redemptions and the margin that we can see in the future of this program is that we see a positive impact, since we didn't. Products have, on average, a higher margin because these transactions are incremental, for example, a dessert after lunch or associated with a new sale. And you know that another advantage that the program has is that enables us to analyze customer behavior as average check and number of visits. When I talk about that, is the average check and number of visits to manage the customer lifetime value. So we're going to keep on investing on that.

We are encouraged about the early results, and we're going to implement two more markets by the next earnings call, by August, and we intend to cover the whole region by 2025. Dan.

Daniel Schleiniger

Thanks, Luis. And Bob's last second question, and final question is, why will Arcos prove to be more or less digital versus other global markets? Thank you. So, Marcelo, I guess you can wrap it up for us.

Marcelo Rabach

Okay. Yes, thanks. Thanks, Bob, for the question. And I think you referred to other McDonald's global markets. I would say that the digitalization of the Arcos Dorados business is strategic for us. It has been that way for many, many years now. That's why 55% of our sales during the first quarter were digital.

And the investments that Luis was mentioning, they have had great returns. All of them have had great returns. A positive impact on our sales, a positive impact in terms of our check, and finally, a positive impact in terms of margin.

So we continue to benchmarking against the best markets within the McDonald's system for example, China is one of the leaders in terms of digital within the McDonald's system. We continue to benchmarking with them and trying to get the best practices and the newest tools that they are using in order to leverage all the efforts that we already have done in terms of digital within Arcos Dorados. So this will be, continue to be a focus for us in coming years.

Daniel Schleiniger

Great. Thanks, Marcelo. And that was actually the last question we received from the investment and analyst community. So that's the end of the Q&A session. Thanks again for all your interest in Arcos Dorados and joining us in today's webcast. We look forward to speaking with you again in the middle of August on our second quarter 2024 earnings webcast. And until then, stay safe and have a great day.
